Ralph Nader has become one of the most polarizing figures in American politics. In 2000, he lost many allies and friends because of his decision to run for president. In 2004, he cemented the hatred of many more. However, Nader used to be one of the most loved figures in America. He fought for protections we now take for granted; airbags, seatbelts, even the air we breathe. How does the leader of the modern consumer movement and champion of American citizenship fall from grace? Hero or villain? Crusader or spoiler? Right or wrong? You decide.
